BOLIVAR, TENN., THURSDAY, JULY 26.

Notice to Subscribers.
Subscribers who fail to receive the BULLETIN regularly and promptly will please report the fact at once to this office.

Rube Shaw has been sent to the penitentiary for fifteen years.

Mrs. Alex. Nelson has left for a visit to relatives at Earlyville, Va.

Mrs. L. A. Bills and Mrs. W. T. Armistead have left on a summer trip to Virginia.

To-morrow Prof. Becton will have a close of his school at Grand Junction. Able addresses will be delivered.

Miss Macon Wilson, one of our most interesting young ladies, has returned from an extended visit to Whiteville.

Keep cool! Keep cool! I delivered to private families at 14 cents per pound. Leave orders with W. S. Armistead.

Miss Anna Russell and Miss Lucilla Hicks, of Mountain Home, Ark., are visiting Mrs. Black, of the Black House.

Mrs. Bettie M. Atkins, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Geo. W. Armistead, has left for her home in Dallas, Texas.

Miss Georgia Featherstone, a charming young lady of Holly Springs, Miss., was up to the moonlight picnic last Tuesday evening.

That negro pollution funeral over the dead body of that murderer, Wilson, was a disgrace to Jackson and an insult to all law and decency.

Mr. Boyk, of Memphis, was in attendance at the moonlight picnic. There was an attraction aside from the pleasures of the dance that drew him up there.

Oscar B. Polk, Esq., that intelligent and enterprising planter, near New Castle, sent us last Saturday a basket of large, delicious peaches. Thanks for this pleasant remembrance.

We call special attention to Commissioner Killebrew's circular in another column. We hope our farmers will respond, as the statistics sought are necessary to make an intelligent report of the crops.

Rev. W. S. Cochran, of Saltillo, is in town. Glad to see him. He will preach in the Methodist church this coming Sabbath, if the repairs on the Presbyterian church are not completed.

Rev. Robert V. Taylor, of Daneyville, reached town Sunday evening en route home from the District Conference. Satisfactory. Always glad to see him. He has a host of friends in Bolivar.

Rev. N. K. Smith and a number of our citizens are on a visit to Jackson to be present on the occasion of the Lodge of Sorrow to be held in that city to-day. There will be most appropriate exercises in memory of the distinguished deceased, Dr. John Chester.

Messrs. J. C. Ord and Robert Black left week on a visit to Sebastian county, Ark., to see the country preparatory to making a settlement. We hope they will have a safe and pleasant trip. Hope to hear from them as to the prospects offered by that county to settlers.

A Request.
BOLIVAR, July 24, 1877.
MESSRS. EDITORS: Having seen in the Jackson Mail and Tribune of last week a communication giving a description of Prof. Hardin's school exercises at Whiteville, and along with it a notice of the Address delivered on the occasion by the senior of the BULLETIN, I hope you will publish the enclosed article, although it refers in pleasing terms to yourself. Yours, etc.,

From an Occasional Correspondent.
EDITORS: We had the pleasure a few days since, of witnessing the closing exercises of Prof. John Hardin's school, located at Whiteville, Tenn. Thursday the 5th inst., was devoted to the examination of classes, reading essays, and declamations by the young gentlemen of the school. I will not occupy space in your excellent and widely circulated journal by giving an account in detail of these interesting exercises, but will remark that the students acquitted themselves handsomely, reflecting credit on their young and talented preceptor.

Friday morning the sun rose in all his splendor. The sky was clear and bright, save here and there a fleecy evanescent cloud that gave little warning of the approaching storm that burst forth later in the day. At an early hour the beauty and chivalry of Whiteville, Sevierville, and Bolivar began to assemble for the purpose of hearing the annual address before the students by Geo. W. Armistead, Esq., senior editor of the Bolivar Bulletin. By eleven o'clock the hall of the Academy was filled to its utmost capacity with an intelligent and appreciative audience. The hour having arrived for the address, Mr. Armistead was introduced to a very appropriate manner by Prof. Hardin.

The distinguished gentleman took for his subject, "Your life work and how to make it truly noble." This subject, so freighted with interest, to all, was in the hands of a master. The address lasted an hour and twenty minutes. Interest was manifested by the audience from the beginning to the close. As the speaker drew the lines of distinction between character and reputation, and placed the pure marble before aspiring youth, and armed him with the chisel of artistic skill, all must have felt that the lesson was well taught. Good judges pronounced it one of the most eloquent and instructive speeches they ever heard. The tribute to the memory of Gen. Robert E. Lee, was very beautiful. As he placed stone upon stone, in the enduring monument, and gathered chaplets of flowers with which to wreath it, the applause by the auditory was so great that some time elapsed before the eloquent gentleman could proceed. The address by a literary gentleman, who has been in print. Excellent music by the Glover Port string band added very much to the interest of the occasion. We take this opportunity to thank the good people of Whiteville and vicinity for courtesies extended us during our visit to their pleasant village. A more refined and hospitable people live not.

MACABRIA.

BY JULIA CLARK.

There are bright felds here by fragrance breathe
A Poison vapor, when the dewdrops fall,
Where moorhills mist a dreamy strain excreats,
And thence a deathly story over all.

There are sweet songs the soliloquy sing,
When lovers follow her with faded breath;
A charming spell among her strains she flings,
And lures them onward to a hopeless death.

There are grand souls the potent gods inspire
To master words, in art and wondrous lore,
They utter wisdom, clear as the crystal sphere,
The heart was purged to the bitter core.

There are proud maidens that the stars adore,
Where wealth and grandeur meet the stranger
Beguiling smiles with passion's fire,
The white swan, when the virtue strays.

Oh, sacrilegious star that still hides!
Oh, veil of beauty rarely torn apart!
The evening star, first, to love confides
The poison arrow that pierces the heart.

Nocturno, Wm., July, 1877.

Closing Exercises of the Whiteville Academy, Prof. J. Floyd Collins, Principal.

Last Friday at an early hour a large concourse of people met at the Methodist church in Whiteville to enjoy the literary treat in store for them on the occasion of the close of Prof. Collins' school. The culture and beauty of that section were well represented in the assembly. In the forenoon the following exercises were observed: First, examination of classes in geography, fifth reader, sixth reader, English grammar, rhetoric, Cicero and Sallust. All these classes showed great proficiency and spoke volumes in praise of the scholarship of the Principal.

COMPOSITIONS.
Compositions were read by the following young ladies: Miss Edith Cross, subject—"Kindness;" Norrie Byrum, "Look Before You Leap;" Belle Johnson, "Castles in the Air;" Mamie Robertson, "My Centennial Trip;" Miss Jimmie Neely, "Earth's Benefactors;" Fannie Mitchell, "Yesterday, To-day and To-morrow;" Laura Hudson, "The Water Wears the Stone Away;" Not by Force, but by Constantly Falling;" Nonie Nuckolls, "The March of Intellect;" Ida Byrum, "Work;" Nannie May Hamlin, "Early Impressions."

We would like to single out some of these essays for special comment but, where, as in this case, all did so well, we are at a loss to particularize. They evinced excellent taste. We hope to have some of them for publication at an early day.

RECITATIONS.
The recitations were as follows: Miss Edith Cross, "Vacation;" Birdie Johnson, "Sensible Talk;" Fannie Cross, "The School-Room;" Mamie Robertson, "The Closing Year;" Norrie Byrum, "A Pretty Comparison;" Edith Cross, "An Evening Prayer;" Fannie Mitchell, "Rhetorical Exercises;" Laura Hudson, "Flood of Years;" Maggie Byrum, "Byron;" Nonie Nuckolls, "Bingen on the Rhine;" Ida Byrum, "The Bell;" Miss Jimmie Neely, "Mrs. Caudle's Lecture."

These young ladies are accomplished readers. We were specially pleased to observe that this feature in education had been carefully fostered by Prof. Collins. So few good readers are to be found that it is a treat to come across those that can read with exactness our mother tongue.

SPEECHES.
Speeches were made by the following young gentlemen: Mr. John R. Robertson, "Supposed Speech of Regulus to the Carthaginians;" Thomas N. Wilkes, "Motives to Intellectual Action on America."

These young men spoke admirably.

Mrs. Dr. Robertson having offered a prize for the best reading in the highest class, Stokely D. Hays, of Jackson, W. A. Cartwright, of Hardeman, and Geo. W. Armistead, of Bolivar, were selected a committee on award. Mr. J. B. Robertson was the successful contestant. The entire class read beautifully and the committee felt embarrassed in making a decision. After the committee reported, presentation of the prize took place. It was a handsomely bound volume of Talmage's sermons. It was presented by Geo. W. Armistead in a short, appropriate speech.

About noon the audience was dismissed for dinner. Soon the lawn around the church was carpeted with table cloths upon which was spread a sumptuous feast of substantial and sweet. Conspicuous among those whose hospitality contributed to this bountiful feast were Mrs. Dr. Robertson, Mrs. William Johnson and Mrs. Dr. Wadell.

After returning the inner man the crowd returned the church. Soon the exercises commenced. Recitations, readings, examinations were engaged until the hour arrived for delivery of prizes. The first prize, silver medal, for general excellence, was awarded to Miss Nonie Nuckolls; the second, a book, to Miss Anna Wood; the third, a book, to Miss Bella Johnson. These prizes were presented by John W. Wilkes, Esq., in a neat speech of encouragement and compliment to the young people. After which the Annual Address by Stokely D. Hays, Esq., of Jackson, was delivered. He was introduced by Prof. Collins. Taking as his subject, "Nothing Crawls with Aimless Feet" he delighted the audience with a most striking and beautiful exposition of his theme. His hits at the top and the fashionable belle received the hearty endorsement of the audience as manifested by repeated applause. The distinguished speaker was getting fully under way in his charming address when his voice failed him and he was compelled to abbreviate his remarks to the deep regret of his eager hearers. However, he won all hearts by his scholarly address. Besides being a man of culture, he is a most genial and estimable gentleman. We were specially pleased in forming his acquaintance. After his speech the audience called for the senior of the BULLETIN and he responded in a short address. The ready-witted and whole-souled John W. Wilkes was called to the front and delivered a most appropriate speech, then Mr. Jesse Hardin was loudly called and he also delighted the assembly with a chaste, classical speech. This closed the exercises of this excellent school. Prof. Collins will resume his school this fall and deserves a still larger patronage. He is a fine scholar and a cultivated Christian gentleman.

We were the recipients of many cordial invitations to spend several days with those refined and hospitable Whiteville families, but business forced us to decline.

We spent Friday night under the roof of that estimable gentleman, Dr. Robertson. We were specially pleased to meet with Julia Neely, who, though advanced in years, is active as a young man. He is the centre of a large circle of most devoted friends and relatives. May his days be yet long with the living. Such a sterling Christian man is a power for good.

DAILY RISING.

A Bolivar Chap Seen the Sun Rise, and What Became of It.

Early rising has among its advocates poets, novelists, philosophers and occasionally a man of sense. "Early to bed and early to rise" is a motto that has saluted our ears ever since the introduction of civilization, and it is somewhat remarkable that to particular hour is universally observed as marking early rising for the denizens of town think early rising means to get up at 8 a. m., whereas the country thinks he has done a half day's work by that time. But the town folks make ample compensation for this apparent loss of time, for they go to bed early, that is in "the wee sma' hours about the twal." As a natural consequence those dwelling in towns never see the sun rise. An exception to this general rule must be made in favor of some of the Bolivar boys and it gives us great pleasure to record this exception, because of the ludicrous incidents attending it. But before we relate the circumstance, and to enable the distant reader to more clearly comprehend, a short description of the locality is necessary.

On the eastern extension of Market street, and some distance from the city limits proper lies this now celebrated locality. Adversitively it is known as "South of Public Square" rurally it is known as "Egg Bazaar," or "Pinhook Row." The late disastrous fires have somewhat crowded this suburb, and now it contains, among other industries, three or four irrigating establishments, with rectifying room attached.

In these establishments are kept tolerably good cool ice, and whisky hot as— (just as you please). After business hours the boys often assemble here for the purpose of making experiments with these two bodies, and among the numerous experiments that can be made with them is one (and this is a favorite with some) that requires a copious supply of water—the colder the better—and unless this is in reach the experimenter suffers inside the flesh. It was to obtain a fresh supply of this indispensable adjunct from the public well, that one of the boys opened his door on a morning that he felt late and saw that which now opens my story.

When he reached the street, happening to cast his eyes eastward he saw a vast globe of redness, the like of which he could not recollect having ever seen before, unless it was when he saw a house burning, and this, surely, was another. This idea immediately entered into his mind, and he cried "fire!" and dropped his bucket, ran back into and through the house, yelling "fire!" He told the market clerk, and he tolled the market bell and soon, from every nook and corner, in all this salvage of town, arose the wild refrain, "fire!"

It is said that fire will make a highland terrapin travel when nothing else will, and it is certain that the mere cry of fire here made fellows tumble out of bed at an hour when all the breakfast bells and church bells in the county could not have budged them. But out of bed they rolled and into the street they came. They had evidently bestowed little or no attention upon their toilets, for some had their breeches on cross-ways, others had them rear in front, and a few had them on—not at all. Some had oyster cutters and others sandline boxes to carry water in. One fellow had a No. 10 wire sieve. On reaching the street each one set up his own little shout, but all joined in the chorus, "Dr. Mc—'s house is on fire!" Whether they rushed like a herd of buffalo. They didn't see his front gate but tore off the paling on each side of it, and made for the well, tore away the hoisting apparatus, and reaching down their vessels began to secure the air with imaginary barrels of water. While they were making these wooden pailings, a door in the house was opened and a voice said, "By dads, boys, what are you doing?" "Your house is on fire; your house is burning up," was shouted in reply, but the Doctor merely turned around, shouldered his saddlebags, snatched up his graduate and pill bottle, and calmly marched out and deposited them in the middle of the street, then turned to join the crowd that already, as they thought, dipped the well dry. On reaching the scene of their operations, and while looking around for the fire, the rays of the rising sun fell full up on his vision, the truth flashed upon him, and he cried out, "Why, boys, by dads, it's nothing but the sun rising." Instantly every oyster cut and sandline box was dropped, the wire sieve was started on a journey upward, and the labors of all succeeded. By this time the perspiration had trickled down and was sloshing over the tops of their boots and an idea had, by some means or other, worked through their hair that it was no fire at all. Greatly fatigued by the unwonted exertion, at so early an hour, and most crestfallen, they repaired to their respective domiciles, each muttering in a peculiar style to himself, imprecations upon the head of the hapless wight that mistook the sun rising, for a house on fire. And each enclosed himself with the reflection that henceforth he could proudly boast of having seen a great natural phenomenon, and after looking through a glass, retired to find out his nose and to dream of configurations and fire extinguishers.

Horrible Murder.

One of the most terrible murders we ever heard of was committed in the 18th District of this county on Sunday night. We gathered the following particulars of the affair: An old gentleman by the name of A. O. Shields was waylaid on that night as he was returning from a neighbor's, by his step-son, Alvis Phillips, and William Burras. The assassin fired at him, the shot taking effect in the left arm. Mr. Shields ran towards a house near by pursued by the two men. After running two or three hundred yards he climbed over a fence into a tobacco patch and here the bloody deed was consummated. They first stabbed him forty-seven times, and then finished the fiendish work by knocking out his brains with an ax. The cries of Mr. Shields aroused a lady and boy who lived near and they ran out and witnessed the last scene in the bloody tragedy. Burras and Phillips threatened them with death if they ever told on them but they immediately gave the alarm and Monday evening Phillips was arrested by a party of citizens, and brought to town by Constable Huddleston and lodged in jail. Burras has not yet been arrested. The cause of this murder was a family quarrel, Phillips accusing Shields of mistreating his mother. An inquest was held on the dead body of Shields by J. C. Jackson, J. P., and a verdict returned in accordance with the facts stated above. The following gentlemen composed the jury: Wm. Rust, George Naylor, Jesse Scroggins, J. B. Naylor, A. J. Naylor, Jas. Hackney and Ingram Wilson.

Good Advice.

Now is the time of year for Pneumonia, Lung Fever, etc. Every family should have a bottle of Roschke's German Syrup. Don't allow for one moment that cough to take hold of your child, your family or yourself. Consumption, Asthma, Pneumonia, Croup, Hemorrhages, and other fatal diseases may set in. Although it is true German Syrup is curing thousands of these dreaded diseases, yet it is much better to have it at hand when three doses will cure you. One bottle will last your whole family a winter and keep you safe from danger. If you are consumptive, do not rest until you have tried this remedy. Sample bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents.
